This book is a new compilation of 523 articles that appeared in the Prince George Citizen newspaper from 1998-2009 in a column called "Remembering." Written by Valerie Fullerton, the idea for this was inspired by stories of how the City of Prince George celebrated its 100th anniversary in 1915. The idea for the book was a year-long journey that is engaging, informative and well-researched. The author's journey through archives, private collections and other sources and documents the rich history of the Prince George area, from its aboriginal roots to the present day. Photos, illustrations and maps are included.

About the author

Valerie Fullerton is a graduate in journalism and administration from Carleton University. She has worked in Ottawa, Hong Kong and Vancouver, before coming to Prince George in 1995. She operates a successful communications consulting business and has contributed as a writer, editor and columnist for business and newspaper columns about provincial and local businesses. She is the author of Establishing and Managing a Profitable Business, a guide for small business owners, and co-author of the long-running "Temperature" column in the Prince George Citizen.

Acknowledgements

The Author extends thanks to the Prince George Citizen, the Exploration Place, the Museum and Science Centre, and the Select Committee on Prince George's 100th Anniversary Celebration. CNC Press is pleased to launch this book to the City of Prince George's 100th Anniversary year in 1915.
