Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of self-reported depression between men and women who had been exposed to violence by intimate partners. Data from the National Longitudinal Study of Women's Health are used. Results show that among women who have ever been married, those who reported being physically or sexually abused by their husbands had higher rates of self-reported depression than did nonabused women. This association remained significant after controlling for age, education, income, employment status, and other factors associated with depression.
